Digital and the Industry

Even greater thanks to Steve Kallis, Jr. for sending some entertaining PDP applications nostalgia, which we'll share over time. Remember the 1975 movie Three Days of the Condor? It's the only major film that features a PDP-8/e system. Particularly cool is that Steve placed the system in the film and programmed it (in FOCAL) so that it appeared to be translating scanned books from foreign languages into English. He got a movie credit as the "technical consultant for the computer sequence." The film "premiered" on its first night of release in the Maynard theater, which Digital took over for the night. Employees were admitted, there were searchlights, etc., and Ken was there. Dick Berube hosted a celebration, and both Steve and a PDP-8/e were presented with "faux Oscar" awards!

Another film, Resurrection, starring Ellen Burstyn, which came out a few years later, shows a MINC-11 system in a parapsychology lab, but it's not featured.

(Resurrection got Ellen Burstyn a nomination for a Best Actress Oscar.)

QUESTION for all Digital Readers

Reader Alice Bucca wrote: Many years ago, when I first started working at DEC, there was a great humorous story about the Mill. It talked about getting lost, etc. and how the building numbers made no sense at all. Would love to get my hands on a copy of this.

Please email story to info@deconnection.org and we'll share it with everybody. Thanks!

Thanks to readers who sent info about the SERP life insurance policy. The answer was that it was after some time no longer offered as a free benefit, though retirees were given the opportunity to take it for a fee.
